

What a pleasure!

I have been thinking of you very much - especially since you are in London, studying at the Royal College of Physicians.
 I hope you are well and enjoying your studies. I am sure you will find the work very interesting.
 I have been thinking of writing to you for some time but have been so busy that I could not find time. I hope you are all well and happy.
 I love you all very much.
 Your affectionate father, John

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the plane was the humidity. It was like a warm blanket, but not in a good way.
 I had heard that the weather was perfect, but this was something else entirely. The humidity was thick and heavy, clinging to my skin. I had never experienced anything like this before. It was a strange feeling, like I had been transported to a different world. The humidity was not just a nuisance, it was a challenge. I had to adjust to it, to make it work for me. It was a lesson in resilience.

The humidity was not just a nuisance,
 it was a challenge. I had to adjust to
 it, to make it work for me. It was a lesson in resilience. The humidity was not just a nuisance, it was a challenge.
 I had to adjust to it, to make it work for me. It was a lesson in resilience.

The humidity was not just a nuisance,
 it was a challenge. I had to adjust to
 it, to make it work for me. It was a lesson in resilience. The humidity was
 not just a nuisance, it was a challenge.
 I had to adjust to it, to make it work
 for me. It was a lesson in resilience.

